

While I agree that BPL may indeed bring much needed competition into the internet access scheme, as an extra class amateur radio operator call sign AE4MH, I feel that the commission must enact regulation and enforcement policies that would be certain to protect the amatuer and other rf services users from interference. These policies must also ensure immunity for licensed operators in these other services. I would suggest that the utilities be encouraged to work together with the ARRL and the amateur radio community in general in their testing of BPL systems. I feel that if all parties concerned can work together in a non adversarial way much can be accomplished.
